Students who wish to receive their education under the Master's Program of Tokyo University of Foreign Studies must possess a sufficient language skill to accomplish their own research. Additionally, they must acquire sufficient basic discipline, including language, culture and society, and the various studies on international society from multidisciplinary viewpoints.

Students are also expected to have a flexible intellect and strong consciousness of relevant issues to be able to complete the multidisciplinary cross-divisional research that respond to the various problems worldwide in the context of dynamic globalization. Tokyo University of Foreign Studies selects the excellent students possessing the above-mentioned as ideal members of our university.

- Special Selection (Entrance Examination by Recommendation): Applicants who are expected to graduate in the same year are assessed with respect to the accomplishment of research, aptitude, and motivation through the Research Proposal, Recommendation Letter, and Oral Examination. (April Admission)
- Fall Entrance Examination: Applicants are evaluated for their fundamental knowledge and capability through their statement of purpose. Applicants are subsequently judged comprehensively regarding their aptitude and motivation through the Research Proposal and Oral Examination in their special academic fields. (April Admission)
- Winter Entrance Examination: Applicants are evaluated with respect to language skills through a written examination, and on the accomplishment of research, aptitude, and motivation through the Research Proposal and Oral Examination in the course of Global Studies. Applicants are judged regarding the accomplishment of research, aptitude, and motivation through the Research Proposal and Oral Examination in the course of Japan Studies. The submitted graduation thesis (or relevant thesis) is included in the assessment as well. (April Admission)
- Global Studies, Peace and Conflict Studies course: Applicants are evaluated regarding the accomplishment of research, aptitude, and motivation through their submitted English proficiency examination, Research Proposal, Letter of Recommendation, and Oral Examination. (October Admission)
- Recurrent Course in Japanese Language Education: Applicants are assessed for their accomplishment of research, aptitude, and motivation based on the submitted documents related to Japanese teaching background, Research Proposal, Letter of Recommendation, and Oral Examination. (October Admission)

All of the Entrance Examinations above are executed, including those for international applicants. The Entrance Examination for the special selection aims to Working Adults is executed and serves as exemption from the corresponding part of the subject in the regular written examination for all applicants taking the Fall Entrance Examination for the course of Global Studies. The Entrance Examination also reduces the required documents for submission in the case of the Winter Entrance Examination.

1. Studies and Courses

Each area (e.g., Studies and Courses) opens specialized subjects required to foster the following human resources.
