Brand New Research about the Single Most Important Communication Skill: Listening

Professor Doyle Srader
Professor, Bushnell University
Fulbright Lecturer, TUFS

The English word "listening" draws together an array of different communication purposes, from processing information to detecting deception. One important set of purposes clusters around the management of interpersonal relationships. This workshop will focus on research published within the past five years that supplies specific usable tips about how to listen in such a way that relationships are strengthened and potentially angry encounters are deescalated.
